

Audacity begins with you.

The art of strategic risk taking.

© Shalom Jacobovitz

Every advance in science, in art and in life has come about because someone had the audacity to do something new and accepted that the risk of spectacular failure was the price of spectacular success. Being audacious is being prepared to experiment and take risks with your ideas and habits - to step outside your comfort and your competence zone. Strategic risk taking offers the chance to develop your confidence, to achieve remarkable things and to realise that failure is not the opposite of success but a stepping stone along on the way.

STRATEGIC RISK TAKERS ARE:

- Committed to using their successes and failures as an opportunity for learning and growth;

'Only those who will risk going too far, can possibly find out how far one can go.'

T. S. ELIOT.

- confident in their preparation and contingency arrangements;
- clear on how their self worth is separate from any individual instance of failure or success.

THIS WORKSHOP EXPLORES:

- attitudes to risk, failure and success;
 - how to determine the right risks to take;
 - the crucial supports necessary to being a confident and effective risk taker;
 - techniques to manage the nagging inner voices, whether critical or anxious, that constantly remind us of the potential for and consequences of failing;
 - resilience preparation for when you do fail;
- how to create and support organisational cultures of strategic risk taking.

This practical and interactive workshop can be tailored to your needs. For more information please enquire today info@rhianwilliams.com.au or phone 02 6230 2955.
